PREFACE

A dictionary is a vital component of any natural language processing system. While the digital form has a potential which has only been partially explored, seizing the new possibilities requires some rethinking. This is the goal of this one-day workshop. Creating, maintaining and exploiting intelligently a dictionary involves many skills, some of which we still lack full understanding of. In order to get a clearer picture on these, we've invited papers addressing any of the following issues :

- type of information to be stored in the dictionary
- representation and structuring (indexing) of the data;
- management, visualization and useability of the data;
- access (aids for navigation, interface, strategies);
- acquisition of lexical data (corpus);
- possibilities for editing entries (annotation, updating);
- integration (combination of the dictionary with other ressources, writer's workbench);
- uses of dictionaries by people (learning/teaching; writing) and by machines (NLP).

While we did not get papers on all these issues, we did get a quite good number of papers on such divers issues as « design of a lexical database, standardization, indexing, word access, corpus-based lexical resources, lexical interfaces, lexical acquisition and formalization ». It was also interesting to see the variety of languages in which these issues are addressed. The proposals range from Japanese, Sanskrit, English, German, Russian, Serbo-Croatian, to French and Portuguese. In sum, the community working on dictionaries is dynamic, and there seems to be a growing awareness of the importance of some of the problems presented in our call for papers.

Hoping to enrich the discussion by giving the greatest number of people a chance to express their views, we have decided to accept next to the full papers (5) several project notes (4) and abstracts (10).

Sincere thanks to all the specialists who helped us to assure a good selection of papers, despite a very tight schedule. Their reviews were not only helpful for our decision making, but also, so we believe, for the authors to improve their papers. In the hope that their work interests you, provokes fruitful discussions and result in future collaborations.
