

[34] graham_bryant (Male): "If you'll just listen..."

[35] Zora (Female): "No! No more listening. No more preaching. We are losing people left and right. We need to act!"

[369] graham_bryant (Male): "Enough, Zora. I'm not putting the torch to innocent people. Do you want to bring the Board's cruisers and gunships down on us?"

[36] graham_bryant (Male): "Captain. Apologies, but our situation grows dire. Our people talk of... foolish endeavors. What news do you bring?"

[558] Player: "If there are gunships, they sure didn't stop me from landing here."

[53] Player: "The printing press is all yours."

[559] graham_bryant (Male): "They are armed all the same. All they need is a good reason, and war is one such reason."

[561] Player: "Is that what you're arguing about? Going to war with someone?"

[157] Player: "What are you arguing about?"

[560] Player: "Okay. Well, the printing press is all yours."

[160] Zora (Female): "We're out of time. We need food and ammunition. We need to hit Stellar Bay while we still have the manpower to do it."

[371] Player: "I see. Listen, I've been to the printing press. It's clear."

[162] Player: "Are they really doing better than you are?"

[161] Player: "You want to attack the city?"

[54] graham_bryant (Male): "Excellent!"

[163] Zora (Female): "Doubtful. But we don't need much, and Sanjar isn't going to share."

[166] Zora (Female): "Yes. I know it's drastic, but... it's clear that Sanjar will never cooperate. And if it's him or us, I choose us."

[56] Zora (Female): "Did you find the Van Noys?"